Captain Salty was a sailor doll, but he wasn't an ordinary toy. He had feelings just like a real person. He could think and move around all by himself when he wanted to. He was a real, living doll.

Captain Salty loved the little boy who owned him, but he didn't reveal his secret to him. Captain Salty looked and acted like a regular doll whenever the little boy played with him. It didn't matter to the boy that Captain Salty didn't walk or talk. He still liked the sailor doll the best out of all of his toys.

"Watch out! Here comes the little boy who owns us," called Captain Salty to the rest of the magic toys in the little boy's room. The Captain knew the boy had gone into town to buy something, and he had used the opportunity to visit with some old friends who lived in the toy box. Now, he had to get back where he belonged. He got back on the shelf just as the boy opened the door.

"Look what I bought today, Captain Salty," shouted the little boy. He raced over to the shelf and held up a new, toy submarine.

"I bought it at the toy store," said the boy. "It's battery powered. It can float, surface and dive just like a real sub. It even has a place for you to sit inside it," said the boy to the doll.

Captain Salty looked at the new toy. He could hardly wait to try it out.

"Let's go down to the little pond and try it out," suggested the boy. He snatched Captain Salty off of the shelf. He ran out of his room and out of his house.

He quickly ran down to the pond and put the Captain inside the sub. The Captain sat half in and half out of the sub as the battery-powered machine went back and forth across the pond. The boy didn't dare allow it to dive under the water. He was afraid the sub might get stuck on the bottom. He didn't want to lose Captain Salty.

The boy got tired of playing with his new toy. He left Captain Salty inside the sub and anchored it near the edge of the pond. He walked over to pick some wild blackberries. Captain Salty came to life as soon as he was gone.

"I think I'll take her out for a spin," remarked the Captain as he hauled in the anchor. He pressed the button that made the ship move and started off across the pond.

He saw an old turtle sunning himself on a rock in the middle of the lake. He decided to go over and say hello. He spun the wheel of the sub and made his way towards the turtle.

"Good day, Mr. Turtle," said the Captain. "I'm thinking of diving my ship under the water of this pond. Could you tell me what it's like down there?" asked Captain Salty.

"It's calm and beautiful," answered the turtle. "The only thing you have to watch out for is an old, rainbow trout. He's a mean fish who snaps at everyone and everything."

The Captain thanked the turtle for the warning. He battened down the hatches of the sub and prepared to dive.

"Dive! Dive!" he shouted as he pressed the button to submerge. The sub slowly sank beneath the water.

It was very beautiful at the bottom of the pond and very quiet. Captain Salty was admiring the seaweed when he noticed a huge shadow quickly approaching the tail section of the sub. He looked out of a porthole.

"Holy, flying fish! It's the rainbow trout. He's going to try to swallow the whole sub!" said the nervous Captain.

Captain Salty quickly started the sub. He raced away from the trout just in time. The snapping jaws of the trout were right behind the sub as the fish followed the ship all around the bottom of the lake.

"I hope the batteries don't wear out before the fish gets tired of chasing me," said the Captain as he checked the power gauge. There wasn't much power left.

Luckily, the fish gave up and swam away. The sub had just enough power to surface. The Captain opened the hatch and anchored the ship. "The next time I dive under this pond, I'll make sure I have torpedoes aboard!" said the Captain as he wiped his sweaty brow.
